

MOUNTAIN WALKS IN CROATIA

In Croatia, mountains cover 21% of the country's surface and are of utmost importance due to the biodiversity and natural heritage they preserve.

The strength of Croatia's mountain regions lies in their potential for rural and agricultural development, the timber industry, and summer and winter tourism. The biggest challenges are depopulation and unemployment, leading to a steady exodus of people from the mountains.

The implementation of the European Cohesion Policy has supported the sustainable development of mountainous territory, leading to the creation of new jobs and new tourism opportunities such as the creation of the Routes of the Frankopans cultural and tourist route. Other improvements include better waste management with the new recycling centre at Delnice and greater energy efficiency, for example the energy renovation of Ivan Goran Kovačić Vrbovsko elementary school.

This brochure is produced in the framework of the communication campaign Montana174- How does the Cohesion Policy shape mountains?

This brochure illustrates how the Cohesion Policy has a tangible impact on the daily life of mountain citizens, using concrete examples from Croatia.
